

The Governor of Alaska, Sarah Palin, disclosed in her political campaign that she had sold the jet that was provided for her use by the citizens of the State of Alaska.

Do the corporate officers of American Family MUTUAL Insurance Company think they are so much more important than a governor? I wonder if the mutual policyholders think the purchase was a good idea. If the "Policyholder News" informed the mutual policyholders of this acquisition, I wonder if they would ask for an accounting decision. Who was responsible for this corporate decision and what "due diligence" went into the decision to purchase?
